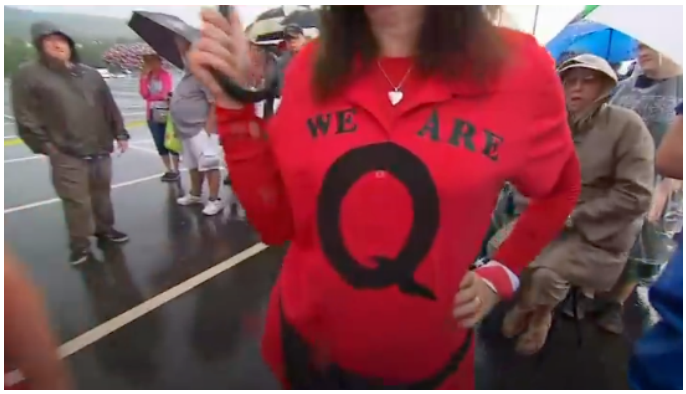
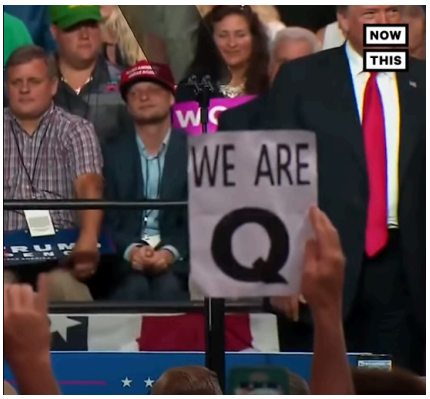
Trump, the theory posits, is engaged in a behind-the-scenes war against evil forces intent on his destruction.

The phrase is meant to convey that mass arrests and a "great awakening" are inevitable no matter what the "deep state" or mainstream media do, said Travis View, co-host of the "QAnon Anonymous" podcast.

This is important data people. It appears that General MacArthur was part of a secret underground "good guy" government organization that used what is referred to as a "Q" clearance to operate under. President Truman was a DEEP STATE PUPPET who released General MacArthur from his command in the Far East for trying to stop the spread of Communism on his watch. It looks like General MacArthur was part of the secret "Q" underground military that was trying to free America from the installation of the NWO DEEP STATE TAKEOVER of America and that these efforts have been going on for 75 years without the knowledge of the general public.





Word has it that this secret underground military movement is working with and supporting Trump and that TOGETHER they have been making plans to DESTROY THE DEEP STATE which appears to be exactly what is happening.

Based on the provided information, there are connections between Donald Trump and General Douglas MacArthur, particularly in Trump's public statements and the views of his supporters. QAnon, is thought of as a far-right conspiracy theory (theories that are coming true) that often intersects with pro-Trump sentiment. This may also be relevant to further connect Trump with the Qanon movement.

Here's a breakdown of the connections:

1. Trump's Admiration for MacArthur:

- Donald Trump has publicly expressed admiration for General Douglas MacArthur, praising him and referencing him in speeches and interviews.
- Trump has cited MacArthur as a "great general" and a figure who represents the kind of military leadership he believes America needs.
- Trump has invoked MacArthur's perceived strategic style as justification for keeping his own plans for military actions secret, stating that he doesn't want to tip off the enemy.
- There's even a book titled "Trump and MacArthur: The Parallel Lives of Two American Demagogues" which explores perceived similarities between the two figures.

2. MacArthur's Controversial Career:

President Truman's main concern was saving as many lives as possible, even if that meant signing a ceasefire along the 38th parallel. General MacArthur did not think a ceasefire was an appropriate solution. The two men clashed. For Truman, the war represented an opportunity to stop the spread of communism into South Korea. For MacArthur, the war was an opportunity to liberate the North from communist control, and aggressive action was required.

MacArthur thwarted Truman's attempt to negotiate a ceasefire when the general ordered his troops to invade North Korea and push the NKPA up past the 38th parallel. This was not the first time the general had ignored direct orders from his Commander in Chief. On April 11, 1951, President Truman officially relieved Douglas MacArthur of his command. Word of his firing spread quickly, and the American public found the news upsetting. Truman felt that his decision was just because MacArthur had overstepped his authority, defied direct orders from his superior and interfered with Truman's hope of ending the Korean War quickly.

- It's important to remember that MacArthur's career was not without controversy. He was a bigger than life figure.

- He was famously relieved of his duty in the Far East by President Harry Truman during the Korean War for defying presidential authority and publicly criticizing the administration's policies.
- Historians often remember MacArthur as a "flamboyant self-promoter" and "politicized, erratic and egotistical" figure. Sounds like the same writers who put out negative data about Trump to destroy his crediblity.

3. Potential Link to QAnon:

- While the connection between QAnon followers and MacArthur isn't explicitly detailed in the provided search results their are definitely link and themes, that do connect their ideologies.
- QAnon followers often believe that Trump is leading a secret campaign against "deep state" enemies as was General MacArthur.
- Some QAnon followers focus on exalting American militarism and patriotism such as Trump and General MacArthur did/do.
- QAnon circles also reinforce those narratives.

4. Example of Trump Referencing MacArthur:

- In 2016, Trump criticized Hillary Clinton for revealing military plans online, stating, "I don't think Gen. Douglas MacArthur would like that very much". This to me was a secret message to Hillary and the Deep State that he supported the secret underground movement that seems to have started under MacArthur.
- In 2015, Trump said MacArthur would be "spinning in his grave" over the approach to our dealing with ISIS.

- In summary, Trump's admiration for MacArthur is well documented. However, it's important to consider the complexities and controversies surrounding MacArthur's career. The provided information we have does not offer a direct link between QAnon followers as it refers to MacArthur, but the overlap in their focus on militarism, patriotism, and support for Trump suggests a possible connection.

WHAT ELSE DO WE KNOW ABOUT TRUMP AND QANON

USA TODAY a FAKED MEDIA RAG THAT I AM EDITING BELOW ON THIS SUBJECT.

"While QAnon largely faded from the spotlight after Trump left office, he has newly amplified the ideas on his social media platform, Truth Social today."

Since the site launched two years ago, Trump has reposted or promoted QAnon-affiliated accounts more than 800 times, ensuring their messages will be widely seen.

The Trump campaign did not respond to requests for comment about QAnon. While he was president the first time, yet Trump spoke favorably of the movement and encourages QAnon chants and plays a song associated with QAnon at rallies.

QAnon began as a set of anonymous posts on message boards. A user or users, identifying themselves as a mysterious whistleblower called Q, that claims to work inside the Trump administration.

The posts alleged world affairs were controlled by a vast conspiracy of Democrats – who also worshiped Satan and abused children – and that Trump was part of a secret plan to vanquish them. Mass arrests, known by followers as "The Storm," would be coming in to destroy the Deep State hold on America and to arrest those guilty of installing Communism in America.

QAnon banners and T-shirts made frequent appearances at Trump's rallies. Then after the country voted Trump out of office, rioters carried QAnon banners into the Capitol as they tried to prevent the certification of the election.

Q WAS BANNED FROM INTERNET PLATFORMS

Mainstream audiences heard less about Q after Trump left the White House and was banned from the platform then known as Twitter. QAnon-affiliated accounts were also banned wholesale from several major social media platforms. But the beliefs never went away.

One key QAnon slogan has been "Where we go one, we go all" (or "WWG1WGA" for short). Another is "Nothing can stop what is coming" (or "NCSWIC" for short), referring to the idea that Trump will eventually expose the conspirators. Media Matters found Trump shared these phrases with his 7 million followers on Truth.

QANON FOSTERED A LOYAL TRUMP FOLLOWING

During Trump's presidency, QAnon supporters wore "Q" paraphernalia to his rallies and held large "Q" signs. Seizing on a loyal constituency, Trump and his campaign began courting QAnon followers."

In earlier years, Trump amplified accounts that promoted QAnon hundreds of times on the social media site then known as Twitter. Since his reinstatement on the site now called X, Trump has not posted about Q, instead he is using his own social media platform to promote "Q's" conspiracy theories which are coming true as we speak today.

Trump has declined to disavow or condemn QAnon. When asked in public settings, all though the Faked Media states that Trump is unaware of the movement yet praised QAnon followers for Qanon movement. That does not mean he is not in link with the 75-year-old secret "Q" underground military movement.

“I’ve heard these are people that love our country,” he said at a White House press briefing in August 2020. “I don’t really know anything about it, except that they do supposedly like me.”

Megan Squire who is the deputy managing editor of the Southern Poverty Law Center's Intelligence Project states that Trump is a STAR PLAYER in the QAnon show.

Told that QAnon supporters believe Satan-worshiping, pedophile Democrats control the “Deep State,” and that only Trump could vanquish them, he responded, “I haven’t heard that, but is that supposed to be a bad thing or a good thing? If I can help save the world from problems, I'm willing to do it."

QAnon finds new reach on Truth Social

On Truth Social, a heavily partisan platform owned by Trump Media & Technology Group, Trump's namesake social media company in which he owns a majority stake, QAnon is only a click or a tap away.

In 2022 Kash Patel, a Trump adviser and board director at Truth Social's parent company, said that the site was intentionally incorporating QAnon messages "to capture audiences."

In September 2022, Trump shared an image of himself wearing a Q-shaped lapel pin along with the phrase: "The storm is coming," a QAnon catchphrase for the period of unrest preceding the Great Awakening when Trump triumphs over the forces of evil in a final battle.

Over the last year, Trump has amplified QAnon-affiliated accounts on Truth Social nearly 350 times. One post linked to a Rumble video that showed QAnon content. Trump commented: "Incredible video!" Another said, "Do it, Q!"

Media Matters identified Truth Social accounts as promoting QAnon if it found they shared slogans, posts described as being from "Q" or imagery related to QAnon.

Truth Social has welcomed QAnon influencers, said Alex Kaplan, a senior researcher at Media Matters who compiled the report.
“In the early months, Truth Social was really boosting these accounts, including one just called ‘Q,’” Kaplan said. “They were playing footsie with Q from the start.”

Why didn't General Douglas MacArthur become a bigger political figure after his retirement from the U.S. Army?

https://www.quora.com/Why-does-Donald-Trump-like-General-Douglas-MacArthur

MacArthur was seventy-one when he was relieved of his commands in the Far East. He had been in the Army for 52 years and had been away from the United States for fourteen years since his previous visit in 1937. He made one last try at political office in 1952 when he half-heartedly attempted to gain the Republican Party’s nomination for President. After his failure to do so he settled down in New York City as Chairman of the Board of the Remington-Rand Corporation.

In spite of what the DEEP STATE writers say on line to defame General MacArthur, he was on active duty until the day he died in 1964. A little known fact of being a General of the Army is that they are authorized a staff and an office, including an active duty officer aide and secretarial staff once they are relieved of duty. General MacArthur’s office was at Governor’s Island where the First Army had its headquarters, plus he received full pay and the allowances of a General in the Army (as did all the other 5 stars generals) including, Marshall, Arnold, Eisenhower and Bradley until he died. He was authorized to wear his uniform. He used military aircraft when traveling on government business such as when he undertook a goodwill trip to the Philippines for the Kennedy Administration (notice the connection to the Kennedy's who were also ANTI DEEP STATE.

Under the US law MacArthur held the rank of General of the Army and Fleet Admiral and General of the Air Force. These are permanent ranks unlike the temporary ranks of Lieutenant General (3 stars) and General (4 stars) which a retired officer either vacates or reverts to a lower rank or retires if he wishes to retain the rank or is appointed to another position of the same or higher rank.

So the assumption that some have made on Quora etc., that MacArthur was fired or sacked who those terms rather than the correct term which was that General MacArthur was relieved from command in the Far East is very important. There is a huge difference between being fired or sacked and believed relieved.

P.S. General Bradley, when he was living in Beverly Hills California maintained an office at Fort MacArthur in San Pedro until he moved to Fort Bliss, Texas.

My point is that General MacArthur was a General until the day he died, meaning that he could easily have been involved in the secret "Q" underground military organization that was attempting to take down the DEEP STATE.
